We wish there was as good an understanding between the Poking have accomplished nothing as an British Government and the British Chambers of Commerce. We wish Hongkong could be heard with greater weight in the councils of the Foreign Department in London. To us it appears inexplicable that Lord Salisbury should be induced to give his support so far as he could officially-to the prolongation of the Burmah railways through the Indo-China valleys to the borderland of China without at the same time recognising how the trade-be South-West China might be tapped more quickly and less expensively by the natural waterways of the country. There seems to be no question by those who have travelled over the Provinces of Kwangtung, Kwangsi and Yunnan, that the three routes that offer the readlest access of Chinese commerce to the sea are the Tonkin route, the West River and everland route to Pakhoi and the river route to Hongkong. Yet here we have Lord Salisbury countenancing if not supporting the Shan railway route without insisting on the West River route being opened. We can understand the desire of the Indian Government and of the Imperial Government to convert Burmah into a profitable apparage of the British Empire, and also the necessity that exists for drafting Chinese labour into Burmah and the intermediate States, besides obtaining a strategical line of communication in Eastern Bais; but sithough this may appear to be the direction that effers least resistance to British diplomacy we fail to see what great commercial advantago will be served by the Mandalay-Runion Ferry railway as a tap for Uhinese trade so long as the lekin question remains unsettled in China. This, we take it, is the only stumbling-block to the real opening-up of the West River. It is a difficult question, but with the Chinese Government in its present parlous condition even the lekin question might be settled if the proper amount of pressure were applied Wore the French or the Russians in a position to take advantage commercially of the abolition of lekin and the read autment of the Chinese used we have no head about in

THE Memorandum of the Unofficial Membors, in which they enter a protest against the decision of the Secretary of State on this matter, is we think, a business-like Room. document. There is, indeed, much less of Saxon plain-speaking in it than might have been expected, in view of the cavalier, Georgian spirit conveyed in Mr Chamborlain's despatch. We think the Unofficial Members have put their united fingers upon the blot of the Colonial Office policy in this matter.; and the Unofficial Members deserve the thanks of the community for doing their duty in this connection. Let us hope they will continue to work together in other questions of policy.

On Thursday a during robbery took place just outside the Settlement of Shanghai, about a mile and a half north of Sinsa. Three native postmen corrying letters, nioney and money orders from Liu Ho and Lo-Tien were attacked by a gang of some twenty ruffians, who set upon them and robbed them of over $500; one of the postmen was killed and another was wounded. The disturbance attracted a number of people, who secured one of the robbers, and handed him over to the tipao, who detained him in his own house. The same night his comrades attempted to rescue him, but were beaten off by the people. The case has been reported to the city authorities .- China Gazette.

Elsiz Adair comes to Hongkong after a sho has received lavish praise noth praise poth from the press and the public. It is unnecessary to say much in introducing the fair denseuse and her clever company to a Hongkong audience. On her last visit the colony sho lefts lasting impression, and seeing that her stay in the colony will only allow of her giving one performance it would be well for those intending to be present to secure their seats carly. Miss Adair has a marvellous amount of dances of her own invention, and her wardrobe is superb. One of her gowns is sixty yards around and another is 122 yards. These gowns are of course made up of very fine silk, which is truly gossamer in fineness. She is supported by a talented company on her secand tour round the world, including Madame Jardyn, who comes with the reputation of having a charming soprane yelos! I larger surface and with pieces of proportions players came to the conclusion that the very much greater than are usually seen. The innovation is due to Mr Alfred A. Hely, himself an enthusiastic player, and he has been induced to make a practical trial of his ideas, from the fact that though chess tournaments are of very great interest to numerous people, those who go to witness them find the utmost difficulty in getting even a glimpse of the game. A board of three feet by three feet is as large as two players seated on either side of a table can use with any degree of comfort. Mr Hely, however, abandons a board altogether and lays out 'an arena' which may be eight, ten, or twelve feet square, and seats his two players on high chairs above it. Each of these-holds a wand or 'catcher,' nine feet long, with a forked projection at the end, by which the pieces can be easily taken up and dropped upon the square on which the exigencies of the game require them to be placed. The pieces themselves are from nine to fourteen inches high, and their outlines are boldly indicated. Sycamore, which is a light wood, is used for them, and they are hollow. By the use of pieces of this magnitude far larger numbers would be able to follow the ideas and moves, and Mr Hely contends that it can thus be brought into the ranks of 'public games.'

> THE BUBONIC PLAGUE IN BOMBAY. MATIVE SUPERSTITION.

Extraordinary rumours have gained credonce amongst the natives of Bombay as to the methods by which the medical men are endeavouring to stamp out the plague, and cases somewhat parallel to what took place in Hongkong during the epidemic are reported by a writer in the Rangoon Gazette, dated Bombay, Nov. 1:-The panic which seems to have laid hold of the minds of the less informed public has grown during the last few days in inverse ratio to the satisfactory decline in the cases of bubonic fever. The returns have been more favourable during the last day or two than at any previous stage since the presence of the disease became known, and yet the public mind has been in a state of considerable excitement, and the wildest rumours have gained credence, not merely among the poorer classes but also in circles laying claim to education and enlightenment. There is reason to fear that the reaponsibility for the extent to which abourd theories have gained credence rests with a few people from whose position in life and education better things might have been

They seriously suggest that sparks from passing engines caused the fire, but the distance from the line procludes this theory.

> ENGLAND AFTER A STATION IN MOROCCO. The New York Sun has the following Paris, October 19 .- While all eyes are turned toward the eastern extremity of the Mediterranean an interesting operation is in process at the western end that needs attention. The attention of Moorish authorities was called to this infraction of their territory and international rights, and the secret cable was taken up and the torpede-boat station abandoned. The trouble, however, was not an end, for the English Government proceeded, without any preliminary understanding, as would have been proper with a friendly state, to lay a cable direct to Tangier. The Moorish authorities, as they were undoubtedly entitled to do, refused to allow the wire to be landed, whereupon the English Government, in its usual short and sharp way of dealing with a weak state, sent an ultimatum to Morocco and held a portion of the garrison of Gibraltar ready to embark on ships of war that were waiting with steam up to cross over and occupy Inngier.
